Your customers rely on information to manage their business; and better information allows them to make better decisions. If they are like most manufacturers, important shop floor efficiency and machine downtime data is collected manually and entered into the production tracking system by a human operator.

It is very likely that this manufacturing data is not as reliable as it could be. The three common problems with manual collection of shop floor data are untimeliness, inaccuracy, and bias. Considering that this raw machine data forms the basis for all subsequent production reports – and that important management decisions are made based on those reports – any problems with the initial shop floor data collection can start a ripple effect that results in a negative impact on their business.

ShopFloorConnect Asset Utilization Software and hardware automatically collect shop floor production data that is timely, accurate, and unbiased. Best of all, this production tracking system does it automatically, and in real time!
